ABSTRACT

Dental professionals are expected to engage in oral disease prevention, but their tools limit the approach to chair side activities based on the common notion that the major dental diseases, dental caries, gingivitis and periodontitis, are behavioural diseases shaped by individual lifestyles. However, lifestyles also have causes and individual behaviours reflect cultural norms, expectations and opportunities that are socio-economically determined and structurally maintained. Importantly, the effects of the societal and socio-economic deter-unable to accommodate some of the requirements of this style. Please read the notes below about how to enter your references so they will format as closely as possible to the requirements.

e journal requires a month and year for the journal. EndNote has no month field. You can enter "January 1988" in the year field to make this format properly; however, be aware that having the can affect sorting and truncation of the date to a two-digit year. (This might be an issue if you need to format your manuscript with a different style.) The journal also requires a month and year

; be sure to enter the full month, day and year in the "Accessed Date" field as there is no discreet access year field.
